GRADE A

" I gaze up at the mountains that surround me on Valentia, And feel a balm soothe my soul, pitted and scarred from its daily battle of life.

I draw strength from them in their war with the elements, Rejoicing in the implacable defiance of the searing wind and scouring rain.

And when the conflict is over, the mountains sit, Nodding in benign serenity, Smiling in the warmth of the Sun, I feel as one of them, ageless of nature.

I turn to the West, and the illusion of timelessness is broken by the Atlantic Rollers, Whose constant march Eastwards to attack the mountains is repulsed by the rocks and cliffs of Valentia Island. "
