

head of the Atelier Photographique, as well as from M. G. Ouy and Mlle. M.-T. d'Alverny^{and} and their colleagues in charge of the Salle des Manuscrits, that palaeographers' paradise.

Thanks are also due to Professors W. Koehler, C. Nordenfalk, O. Pächt, E. Panofsky, M. Schapiro, and K. Weitzmann, well-known art historians, for communicating freely their views on the ornamentation in the manuscripts here treated. [#] He must further express his thanks to his immediate assistant, Mr.

James J. John, for his careful work in proof-reading and verifying the bibliography and altogether lightening the editor's burden in every possible way. He is obliged to Miss J. Murray for her diligent and conscientious care of all that concerns the photographs. Credit is also due to Mlle. M. Dulong for furnishing first drafts of a number of manuscripts dealt with in this volume.

His supreme debt, however, is and has been to Prof. B. Bischoff who has given generously of his time and knowledge and assisted the editor at every stage of the undertaking, greatly to the benefit of the publication. For help of various sorts thanks are due to the Institute staff at Princeton and to kind friends in Oxford and Paris. As for the Clarendon Press--officers, readers, and compositors alike--all the editor can do is to repeat verbatim what ^{he} ~~was~~ said in the previous volume: 'Never has an author of a troublesome technical and unremunerative work been treated with greater consideration, and never have proof-sheets reached him in cleaner shape. The admirable printing, the excellent

On the question of ancient neums he had the advantage of frequently consulting Dom Beyssac, and on the technique of script Mr. Arnold Bank--himself an expert scribe.
